Five UR Faculty Featured on The Academic Minute

It was University of Richmond Week on The Academic Minute, a national radio program featuring professors reading short, general interest essays about their research. The five UR faculty highlighted this week include:

1. Camilla Nonterah, assistant professor of health psychology, reading "How to increase your chances of sticking to your health goals"
2. Della Dumbaugh, professor of mathematics, reading "Three Times Political Conflict Reshaped American Mathematics"
3. Jack Singal, associate professor of physics, reading "Moon Landings"
4. Monti Datta, associate professor of political science, reading "How Many People are Enslaved Today?"
5. Steve Nash, senior visiting research scholar, reading "Threats to National Parks"

Expert Resource: Ghosts in the workplace?

Are you being "ghosted"? According to Carrie Hawes, associate director of employee relations, ghosting started in the dating world but moved into the workplace. "Essentially it's when a potential employer, or a potential job candidate, disappears from the hiring conversation," says Hawes. Contact Lindsey Campbell to connect.

On Deck: UR's 21st Annual Trick or Treat Street

Each year families and their children flock to campus for Trick or Treat Street, a safe and fun trick or treating event run by UR students. The event is Oct. 20, 11 a.m.-3 p.m.
